Dear Tony:

This is in further reply to your letter of 9 February. The materials on the Harvard Program make a cogent case for treating information as a basic national resource. As you say, much of government is an information system. Nowhere is this more true than in the intelligence business.

I must reserve for the present any consideration of a direct relationship in this area "with academe," as you have put it. I think our first priority must be to put our own information policy house in order and to see to the introduction of effective community-wide intelligence information handling systems.

For the present, therefore, I believe it is prudent to focus our institutional outreach on our continuing relationship with the National Commission on Libraries and Information Science. I understand that you are associated with some of its activities.

STAT I have asked [] Chairman of my Intelligence Information Handling Committee, to stay in touch with you on my behalf.

Yours,

etc

Dear Dr. Settles,

Thank you for your letter of 15 March. Your warm comments on the performance of [redacted] as a recruiter and on the manner in which he represented this Agency are most appreciated. We are passing a copy of your letter to Tom, knowing that he will be gratified by your thoughtful expression of the esteem he has earned for himself at the University of Washington.

Dear Admiral Turner:

STAT For many years [] has been a recruiter on our campus for the Central Intelligence Agency. During this time he has created and maintained outstanding relationships with faculty, students, and placement personnel. He has always gone the extra mile to insure that details have been taken care of, that answers were clarified when clarification was necessary and that all procedures were acceptable to our office. He has done these tasks cheerfully, and upon leaving our office after each recruiting visit, left us holding an extremely positive attitude toward this recruiter as a person and toward the Central Intelligence Agency as a recruiting organization.

We are pleased that he has this opportunity for early retirement, but we will truly miss our interaction with []. We thought you would like to know the high esteem we hold for the representative you've sent to our office for the past many years.

Dear Ms. Newman,

Thank you for your letter of March 22 regarding the Nation's Business article referring to a writing manual used by this agency. We suspect that the manual in question is a booklet entitled "Word Watchers Guide" which has been used in the past in parts of the Agency but is not used in our training courses and which we do not plan to reprint.

We have a few copies left so I am enclosing one for your information.

I hope this will be helpful. We appreciated hearing from you.

Dear Sir:

I noted in the February 1977 issue of Nation's Business that your agency has prepared a writing manual that is available to business schools.

Your effort to achieve higher standards of clarity and effectiveness in written communications interests me greatly. I would like very much to share your views with my students; also I would greatly appreciate a chance to examine the material referred to in Nation's Business.

In return, if I can answer questions about my program or assist you in your current effort, please let me know.

Sincerely yours,
